

The DCCC agrees and affirms:

- Protection of U.S. campaigns from outside interference is paramount and must be reflected in the operations of political committees.
- The political efforts carried out by committees must be executed with the best interest of preserving and strengthening American Democracy.
- The nefarious use of technology presents an undeniable threat to U.S. political campaigns.
- American campaigns are a target for foreign adversaries and the committee will work, to the best of our ability, to protect the campaigns we serve.
- The DCCC recognizes the primary and lead role of States and Counties in conducting elections and ensuring their integrity, and encourages the federal government to help local election officials fortify those efforts.

The DCCC hereby pledges:

- The committee will not participate, aide, or encourage hackers or foreign actors in any attempt to influence American elections.
- The committee will never seek out stolen hacked information for use in any operations.
- The committee will never use known stolen hacked information, or promote or disseminate stolen hacked materials to the press, regardless of the source.
- Any foreign actors attempting to participate, operate, influence, or contact the committee or any of our campaigns will be reported to the appropriate law enforcement authorities.
- The committee calls on the chief election officers in all states to ensure the most robust fortification and protection of elections systems leading up to, and during, the 2018 Midterm elections.

Signed:

Chairman Ben Ray Lujan
